Ex-President Pierce was called upon to respond to this sentiment; and, on rising, he was greeted with enthusistic applause. He said:

OESTLEMEN: I have pertinaciously declined to occupy any of your time this evening by remarks that I might be inclined to submit, and until this moment I was not sware that anything could occur to make it absolutely indispensable. I have been deeply touched ever since I met the society in the other room, and I am free to confess that the great leading thought in my mind has been that nearly all soldiers of the revolution have passed away; and this thought is associated with others that will occur to all your minds. I can enjoy, have enjoyed, this delightful intercourse with you, and all'that is so pleasant in association and intrinsically in the meetings of this society. I have, I may say truly, felt more deeply than ever before that it is good to be in any place, in any association, whence one is conscious he is to go out with higher emotions and purposes than he went in; and I take that to be eminently true of every meeting of the Society of the Cincinnati.

Connected as I was for a long period with the Pension Committee I saw the process by which that list passed away year by year. In the county in which I reside there is not a single revolutionary soldier surviving. I may mention as a fact, which has always struck me as a remarkable one, that the last survivor in the county of Merimac was a man left for dead on the field of Stillwater, who remained there during the night, and was carried seven miles the next morning before his wounds were dressed. I recollect seeing him at my father's house. He received two bullet wounds and five bayonet stabs, one shot carrying off a part of his tongue, so that he could never speak plainly; but he was the last survivor in the county of Merimac, not dying until within two or three years. They have all passed away; but their memory is left to us not only the principles they laid down, the objects they declared when this society was established, says our history begins with the first gun of the revolu-tion. I say so, too. We have no coats-of-arms to fall back upon. We start at that point. There is not a gen-tleman here to-night who had a revolutionary father who has not felt the benefit it has conferred upon him through life. In spite of the feeling which was attempted to be excited, and in spite of that pamphlet of Mirabeau, and that pamphlet of the learned South Carolinian, there has been no feeling pervading the great mass of the commu-nity but that of a desire to honor the sons of revolutionnote no feeling pervading the great mass of the commu-nity but that of a desire to honor the sons of revolution-ary fathers. I do not propose, gentlemen, to detain you at all. It was not my purpose to speak; but an incident occurs to me in connexion with the very eloquent remarks to which we have listened from the gentleman who last addressed us which ought to be remembered for the hon-or of Massachusetts and the honor of the race. Let me addressed us which ought to be remembered for the honor of Massachusetts and the honor of the race. Let me say at this point, sir, that I was very much struck by what Governor Pennington said; and if I had thought of preparing to make a speech anywhere, I certainly should not have brought it to Boston, where I should meet such men as Winthrop, and Hilliard, and Laut, and other friends who have addressed us. The incident to which I allude is one familiar to you, where a sturdy man in humble life was noticed to be passing through a sparsely-settled town not remote from Boston, and before whose door the next morning there stood more than thirty men. After a hasty repast, furnished by his wife, they left the house—that man to be borne back as the first martyr in the revolutionary cause. I refer to Capt, Davis. Although Capt. Davis fell at the very commencement of the revolution, no provision was made for his widow until I had the honor to introduce a bill in the Scaale as late as 1835. But when you compare the sufferings of the men of the revolution with the sufferings of the women I say there is no parallel. They were at home struggling with want—struggling with that anxiety inseparable from their condition, with no high impulse and emotion, such as bore up their husbands, sons, and emotion, They were the heroires of the revolution, and emotion, such as bore up their husbands, sons, and brothers. They were the heroines of the revolution, and they did as much to achieve the results of the revolution as did the men who left their bloody footprints all over the State of New Jersey, to which the gentleman has referred. revolution, and the memory of that great, gallant, and heroic man, over the spot of whose fall I am told an appropriate monument is at last and speedily to be creeted, Gen. Warren. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

The Duchy of Lancaster has been handled in the same way, and the income arising from this source is, it is said, destined to make provision for the younger princes as each attains a proper age. Again, the Queen has purchased Balmoral and Osborne—the seats where she principally resides—out of her own private income, without putting the nation to one farthing of expense. These points, it is contended, ought to be considered when the dowry is under consideration.

There are, I believe, but three powers who have representatives at Teheran—namely, France, Russia, and Turkey. I am assured the Fronch and Turkish ministers simultaneously insisted on the Shah's ratifying the treaty; and that the French minister was particularly charged by his government to tell the Shah that in doing so he might rely on the friendship of the Emperor Napoleon. I alluded at the friendship of the Emperor Napoleon. I alluded at the time to the good offices of the French government, and the friendly assistance of the Emperor during the ne-solutions in Paris which preceded the treaty, and I feel pleasure in now stating—what I believe to be true—that they have been followed up, at the Emperor's desire, by his minister at Teheran.

The Admission of Jews to Parliament.—The Morning Post, (which is generally considered to be in ministerial secrets,) whilst still unconvinced of the necessity or justice of the measure, believes that the time has come when the admission of Jews into Parliament will be carried; that the circumstances under which the subject is now brought forward, and the strength with which it will be supported, are such as will have great weight with the Upper House, and secure a small majority in its favor.

NEWS BY THE INDIAN OVERLAND MAIL.—The details of the advices brought by the overland mail have been received. From the particulars given respecting the suicides of General Stalker and Commodore Ethersey, there can be no doubt that these officers had broken down under the weight, real or imaginary, of their responsibility. In consequence of continued disaffection amongst the Bengal Sepoys, the 19th regiment of native infantry had been disbanded in the metropolitan cantonment of Barrackpore. The men, after asking in vain for permission to petition, laid down their arms, the native officers actually weeping with grief and rage. Disaffection still continues, and it is feared that another regiment will have to be disbanded. From China we learn that Admiral Seymour was at Hong-Kong. On the 19th of March her Majesty's steamer Hornet, Capt. Forsyth, while cruising off St. John's island, fell in with'a fleet of piratical junks. The steamer could not be brought within range of them, owing to there not being sufficient draught of water in the bay where they were. The boats of the steamer pulled in, and Captain Forsyth, observing the position of the junks was a strong one, landed with a party of marines, and reached an eminence, whence, as well as from the boats an effectual fire was kept up on the junks. After a good deal of firing, the pirates took to the hill. Seventeen of their boats were taken possession of, and subsequently destroyed. One man of the Hornet was severely hurt by a stinkpot, but that was the only accident that occurred to our force. On board one of the junks were found a European and a Goa Portuguese, who said they had been pressed by the pirates.

TillE undersigned offers at private sale a very described farm, containing about 340 acres. It is located at the southeast extremity of Charles county, Maryland, and is bounded on the south by the Potomac river, on the cest by the Wicomico river, and on the north by a creck that empiles its waters into the Wicomico, and at the mouth of which there is sufficient current to propel milist on any desirable extent.

The lands are well adapted to the growth of corn, wheat, and to bacco; and, from the abundance of sea grass that annually floats on its shores and the quantity of shells that are on it, could be made one of the richest farms in the county. There is a superabundance of wood, and a comfortable dwelling house, kitchen, quarters, cornouse, stables, and a large barn, all in good order. Oysters, fieth, and wild fowl are abundant. Communications to Baltimore and the District of Columbia are almost daily.

THE MILITARY VISIT.—RECEPTION BY THE PRESIDENT.

"In evidence of the degree of humanity and decency possessed by the thirty 'plug uglies' who so precipitately decamped by the 3-o'clock train on Monday afternoon, it may be stated that on their passage in the cars to Bultimore they expended the contents of their revolvers, originally intended for the persons of the citzens of Washington, upon the bodies of the cows and horses that were grazing in the fields along the road. There must have been several hundred shots fired. When the train arrived at the fork of the road on the suburbs of Baltimore, the thirty 'plug-uglies' got out, undoubtedly for the purpose of avoiding the risk of an arrest at the depot. The other passengers must have felt themselves especially fortunate and agreeable in such company. The testimony op which we make this statement is unimpeachable. Is not the railroad company responsible for any injury done to property in this way?"

"A butcher had a large, ferocious dog, which he kept for the protection of his slaughter-house, where a consid-erable quantity of meat was constantly stored. A man engaged in gunning, while passing along the road by the fence, was attacked by the dog, which, however, did not leave its master's premises. Seeing the animal approach-ing, and fearing for his safety, the sportsman shot and wounded him. The owner of it thereupon sues for dam-

I had determined to abstain from appealing to you during the controversy wherein Jonathan S. Jenkins is charged with acts little short of piracy. The reporters of newspapers were, I thought, sufficient to apprize you and the public of the proceedings in the case. Had the person who figures so conspicaously before you (for acts, if not piracy, at least germane thereto) not have, in dictating to his animacisis, advanced ideas that neither can be supported by facts nor truth, I should have persevered in my first intent.
